CABA ANNOUNCES FORMATION OF AN INTELLIGENT BUILDINGS COUNCIL

November 9, 2001

The Continental Automated Buildings Association (CABA) takes great pleasure in announcing the official formation of an Intelligent Buildings Council.

The Intelligent Buildings Council will specifically review opportunities, strategize, take action and monitor initiatives that relate to integrated systems and automation in the "large building" sector.

"The creation of the Council will ensure that critical issues are addressed and that a bevy of new initiatives are undertaken," said Richard Buzun, CABA's Chairman of the Board and President & CEO of Siemens Energy & Automation. "It is our intention to attract industry leaders who encourage the development and promotion of integrated systems and automation in large buildings."

CABA members and other industry participants will have the opportunity to join the Council. Bob Williams, Vice President of Invensys plc, has volunteered to become the first chair of the Council.

The Council's membership will be open and balanced. It will be comprised of leading and visionary representation from all segments of the building industry including manufacturers, service providers, building owners and building professionals.

Mr. Buzun officially unveiled the formation of the Council during his keynote address at the Broadband Building & Technology Show. The establishment of the Council emerged during discussions raised at CABA's Intelligent Buildings Summit, held in conjunction with the show. The summit featured numerous industry stakeholders, who discussed and identified key issues facing the large building sector with respect to integrated systems and building automation.

To join the Council or obtain more information, please contact Ron Zimmer, President & CEO of CABA at 888.798.CABA (2222) or caba@caba.org.
