CABA'S E-VENTS TO COST EFFECTIVELY DELIVER INDUSTRY RESEARCH TO WIDE AUDIENCES

November 13, 2001

The Continental Automated Buildings Association (CABA) announced the creation of its interactive Web based/conference call seminars.

CABA's E-Vents are designed for industry participants who want to profit from the latest industry research, while saving money on travel budgets and whose time is at a premium.

Topics of CABA's E-Vents will focus on residential automation/networking technologies, standards/protocol interoperability issues, and intelligent buildings. CABA's first E-Vent has been scheduled for Thursday, December 6, 2001. This E-Vent will focus on CABA's federally funded project: the Technology Roadmap for Intelligent Buildings Technologies. Participants will share in the preliminary results of this federally funded project, $100,000 in scope, as the head project researcher, Frank Spitzer discusses the key issues of opportunity.

CABA's E-Vents are designed to work with the busy executive. Because CABA's E-Vents are designed to be viewed on a PC along with a conference audio link, there is no limit to the number of participants from each registered company.

These E-Vents will also allow participants to interact with any other participant and/or the speaker. You can also benefit from live polling to take advantage of snap shots of what other industry leaders are thinking.
