IBM JOINS CABA BOARD OF DIRECTORS

October 8, 2007

The Continental Automated Buildings Association (CABA) announced today that Rob Frazier of IBM has been named to the association's Board of Directors. CABA is a nonprofit industry association that provides information, education, and networking to help promote advanced technologies for the automation of homes and buildings. Frazier joins a group of industry leaders active on the association's board of directors.

"I am very pleased to be able to actively contribute to the CABA Board," stated Frazier. "CABA is a very important organization that represents the collective interest of the building automation industry. It is an important industry network in and of itself which IBM is pleased to participate with."

Frazier is currently the Program Manager for Global SO Sales Integration at IBM, where he specializes in security solution. He has had a career in IT and security that has spanned three continents, four decades and five languages. He has worked with IT security as an Army and Foreign Service Officer; as CIO of McMurry University; and most recently as an executive consultant with IBM. He is a frequent speaker on security at security conferences and conventions, and has been quoted in publications as diverse as Information Week, the New Yorker and books on security and terrorism.

Frazier has worked on security projects for manufacturing, finance, education, pharmaceuticals, transportation, retailers, state, local, and federal government.

Frazier holds degrees in History and Modern Languages from Texas A&M University, and holds CISSP and ISSAP certifications.

"We are delighted to welcome Rob Frazier and IBM to CABA's Board," said Ronald J. Zimmer, President & CEO of CABA. "His work at IBM and his industry expertise from multiple years of global high technology and IT security efforts will provide expertise and insight to our organization."
