CABA and Australia's Commercial & Home Automation Association Enter Into Agreement

February 24, 2011

The Continental Automated Buildings Association is pleased to announce that it has entered into a collaborative agreement with Australia's Commercial & Home Automation Association.

The Commercial & Home Automation Association was recently formed to offer assistance in the areas of training, certification and licensing for its membership in consultation with national and state governments in Australia.

The Commercial & Home Automation Association seeks members who believe in the premise that all new homes in Australia should have some form of home automation installed, in order to provide cost savings, significant environmental and security benefits, and increased quality-of-life.

"We are extremely excited to have entered into an agreement with CABA in order to enhance the home and building automation industry," stated Andrew Hendy, Chief Executive Officer at the Commercial & Home Automation Association. "We are looking forward to working together to expand our outreach as well as exploring opportunities to increase public awareness concerning the benefits of home and office automation technologies."

Over the past several years, CABA has been true to its mission and objectives and increased its association member presence to over 100 countries . CABA has signed cooperation agreements with trade organizations and governments in such countries as South Korea, Russia, Brazil and UK. CABA is focused on working collaboratively with organizations that are also committed to expand integrated systems for 'connected homes and intelligent buildings'.

"CABA is delighted to be cooperating with the Commercial & Home Automation Association," said Ronald J. Zimmer, CABA President and CEO. "It is within our international mandate to forge closer links with our colleagues in Australia and throughout the world in order to strengthen the global marketplace for home and building automation products and services."
